PUIG DE GALATZÓ

Located on kilometre 96.7 of the Ma-10 road between Estellencs and Andratx, you begin the walk on a forest path that forks a little further along, in the shadow of Es Morralàs, a crag that measures slightly more than 600 metres at its highest point. The detour on the right following the Dry Stone Route leads to the estate of Sa Coma d'en Vidal, but you will take the route on the left, leading you to Boal de ses Serveres, and forget about the one on the right, a path that leads to the Pas des Cossis.

Pass through the recreational area and continue along the forest path. After a small climb it leads you to Sa Copa d'Or, a place whose name comes from the golden colour of the wheat sown in other eras, and from where you can spot the town of Estellencs for the first time.

You go around the hillside, until, at Coma des Moro, you ignore a route on your left and reach Rota de n'Ugó, a flatter area with some old terraces.

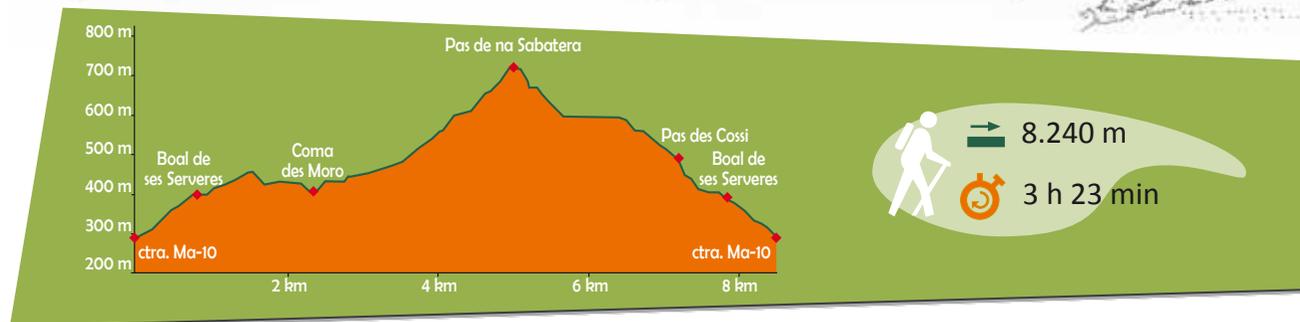

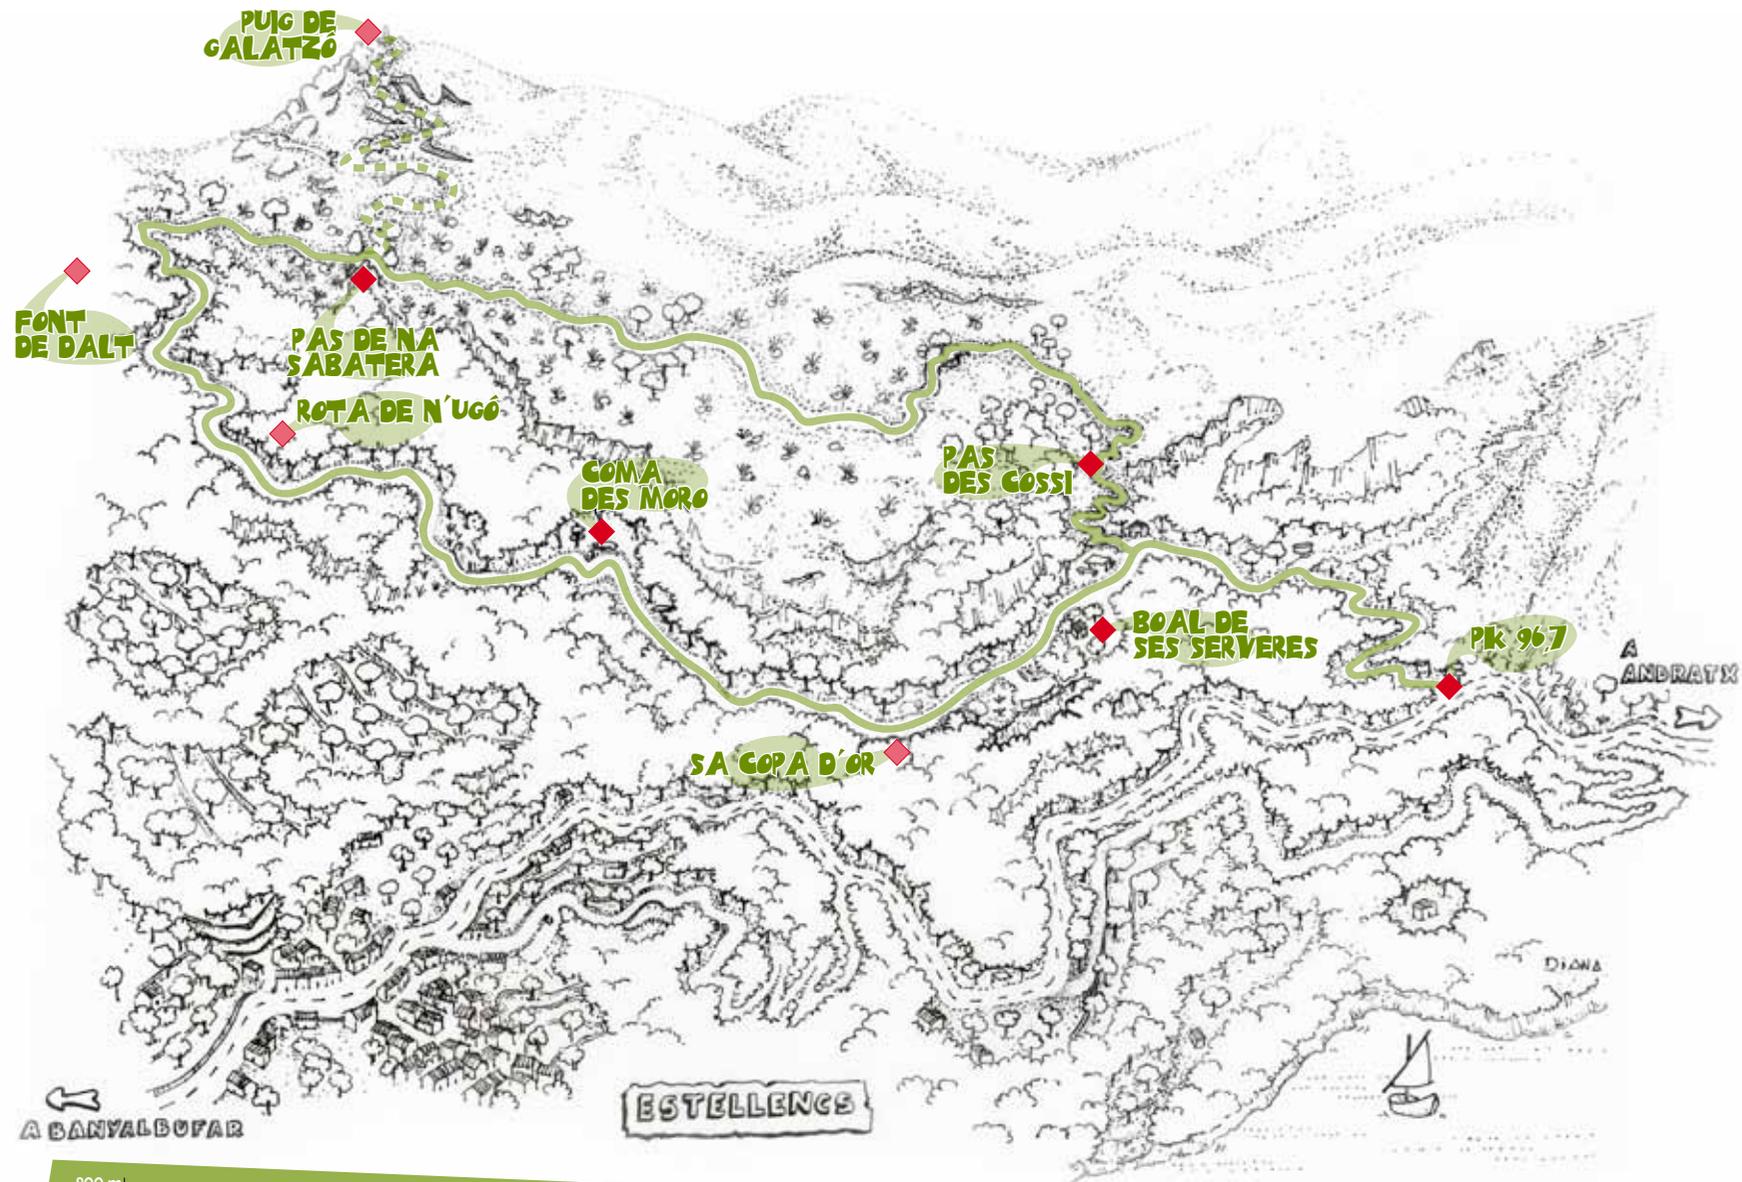

This system was used to begin growing on very poor land which required a great effort in order to produce very little. This was the first abandoned land, so now you can only see the remains of some mountains of rocks or terraces that have become overrun with holm oaks along the route, and they are gradually disappearing.

You pass by the ruins of a well and further along you will find another crossroads. Ignore the route to the left which leads to the Font d'Alt, and keep climbing up westwards in order to reach the Pas de na Sabatera, a strategic crossroads. The path which heads west, and downwards, will once again lead you to the Boal de ses Serveres, while if you want to reach Puig de Galatzó, a relatively difficult option, you will head south along a path with a steep slope that leads to a small flat area where it once again splits into two. Here, you take the path on the right, then head up to a steeper area of land and afterwards you will climb a little with the help of your hands in order to reach the mountain summit.

You return along the same route taken up to Galatzó until you once again reach the Pas de na Sabatera. Here, turn to the left in order to keep going down the slope of Sa Moleta Rasa. You will pass a small well, until you arrive at the starting point on the Pas des Cossis without difficulty.

LA ROTA DE N'UGÓ

Ground clearing ("rotes") was the work of the most underprivileged workers, who through a contract signed with the owners of the large estates, would remove weeds and stones in order to then be able to sow and farm the land for a certain amount of time, before returning it again to the estate.

LA TAULA DE GALATZÓ

At the conical peak of the Puig de Galatzó, visible from all of the western side of the island, is the boundary between the municipalities of Puigpunyent, Estellencs and Calvià. However, this was also the boundary point between three large estates: Son Nét, Son Fortuny and Galatzó. It is said that the owners of these estates met here, each one on their own property, sat around a stone table ("taula").
